LOGLINE

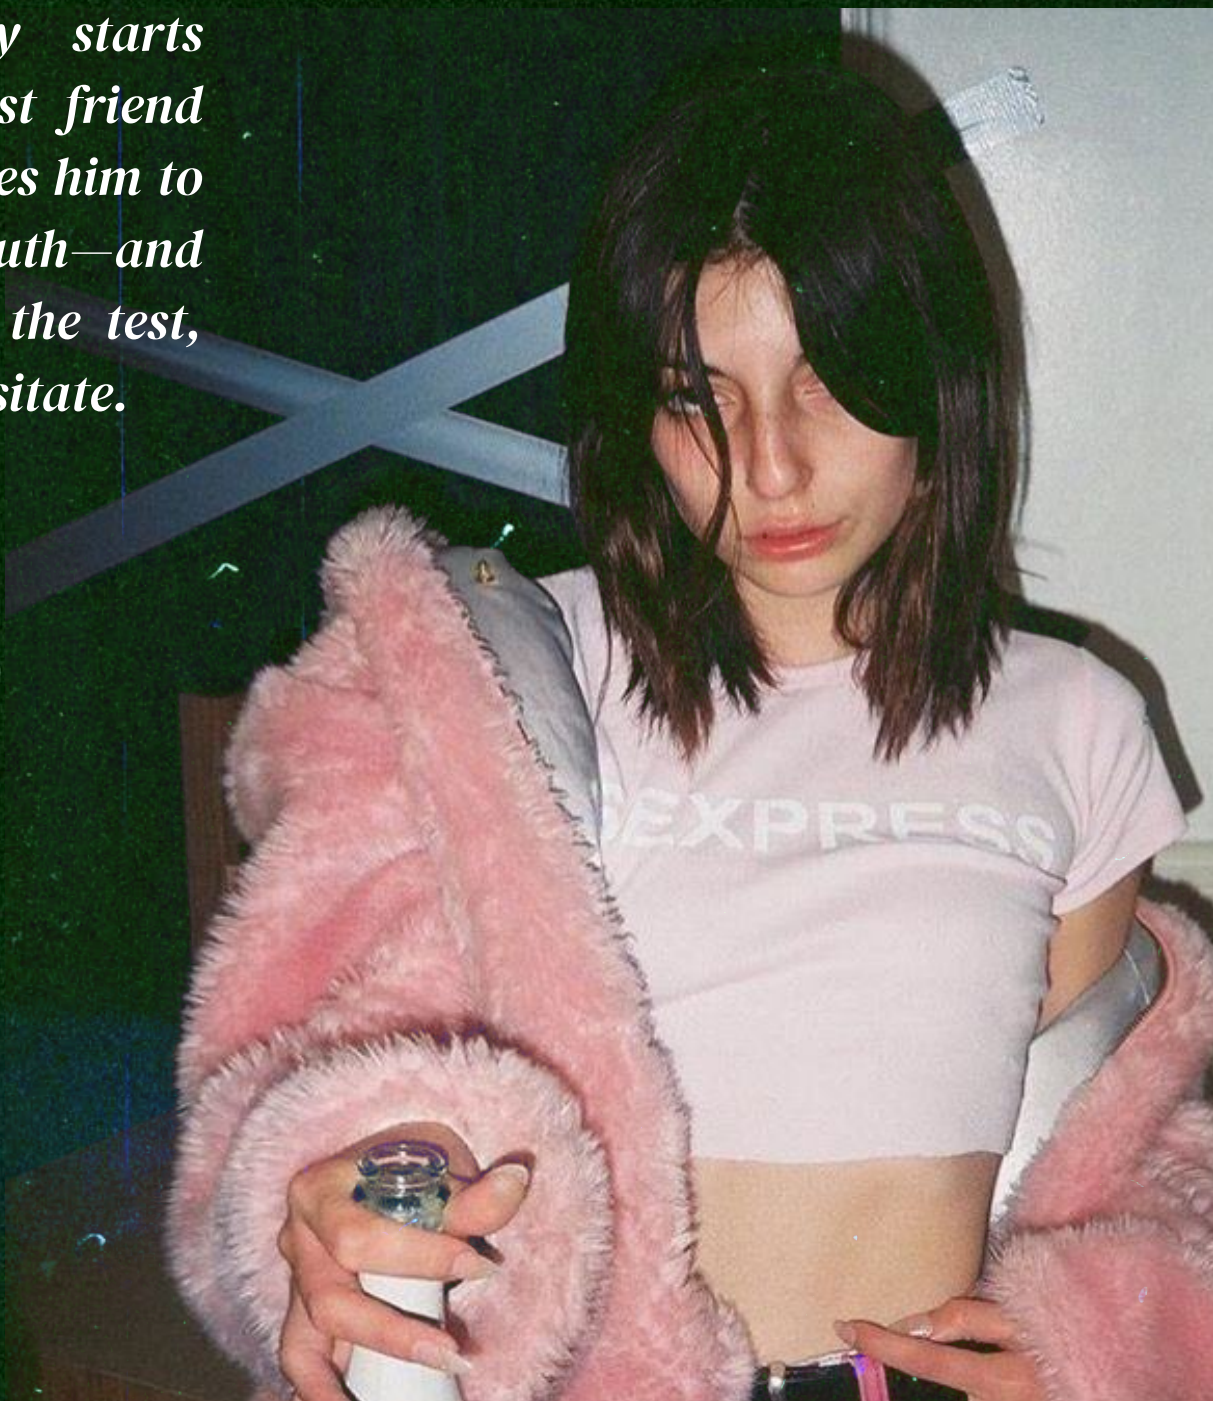

As a serial killer stalks Los Angeles, two best friends navigate the city's chaotic dating scene—swapping stories, and dodging red flags—until one seemingly perfect match unravels into a chilling revelation.

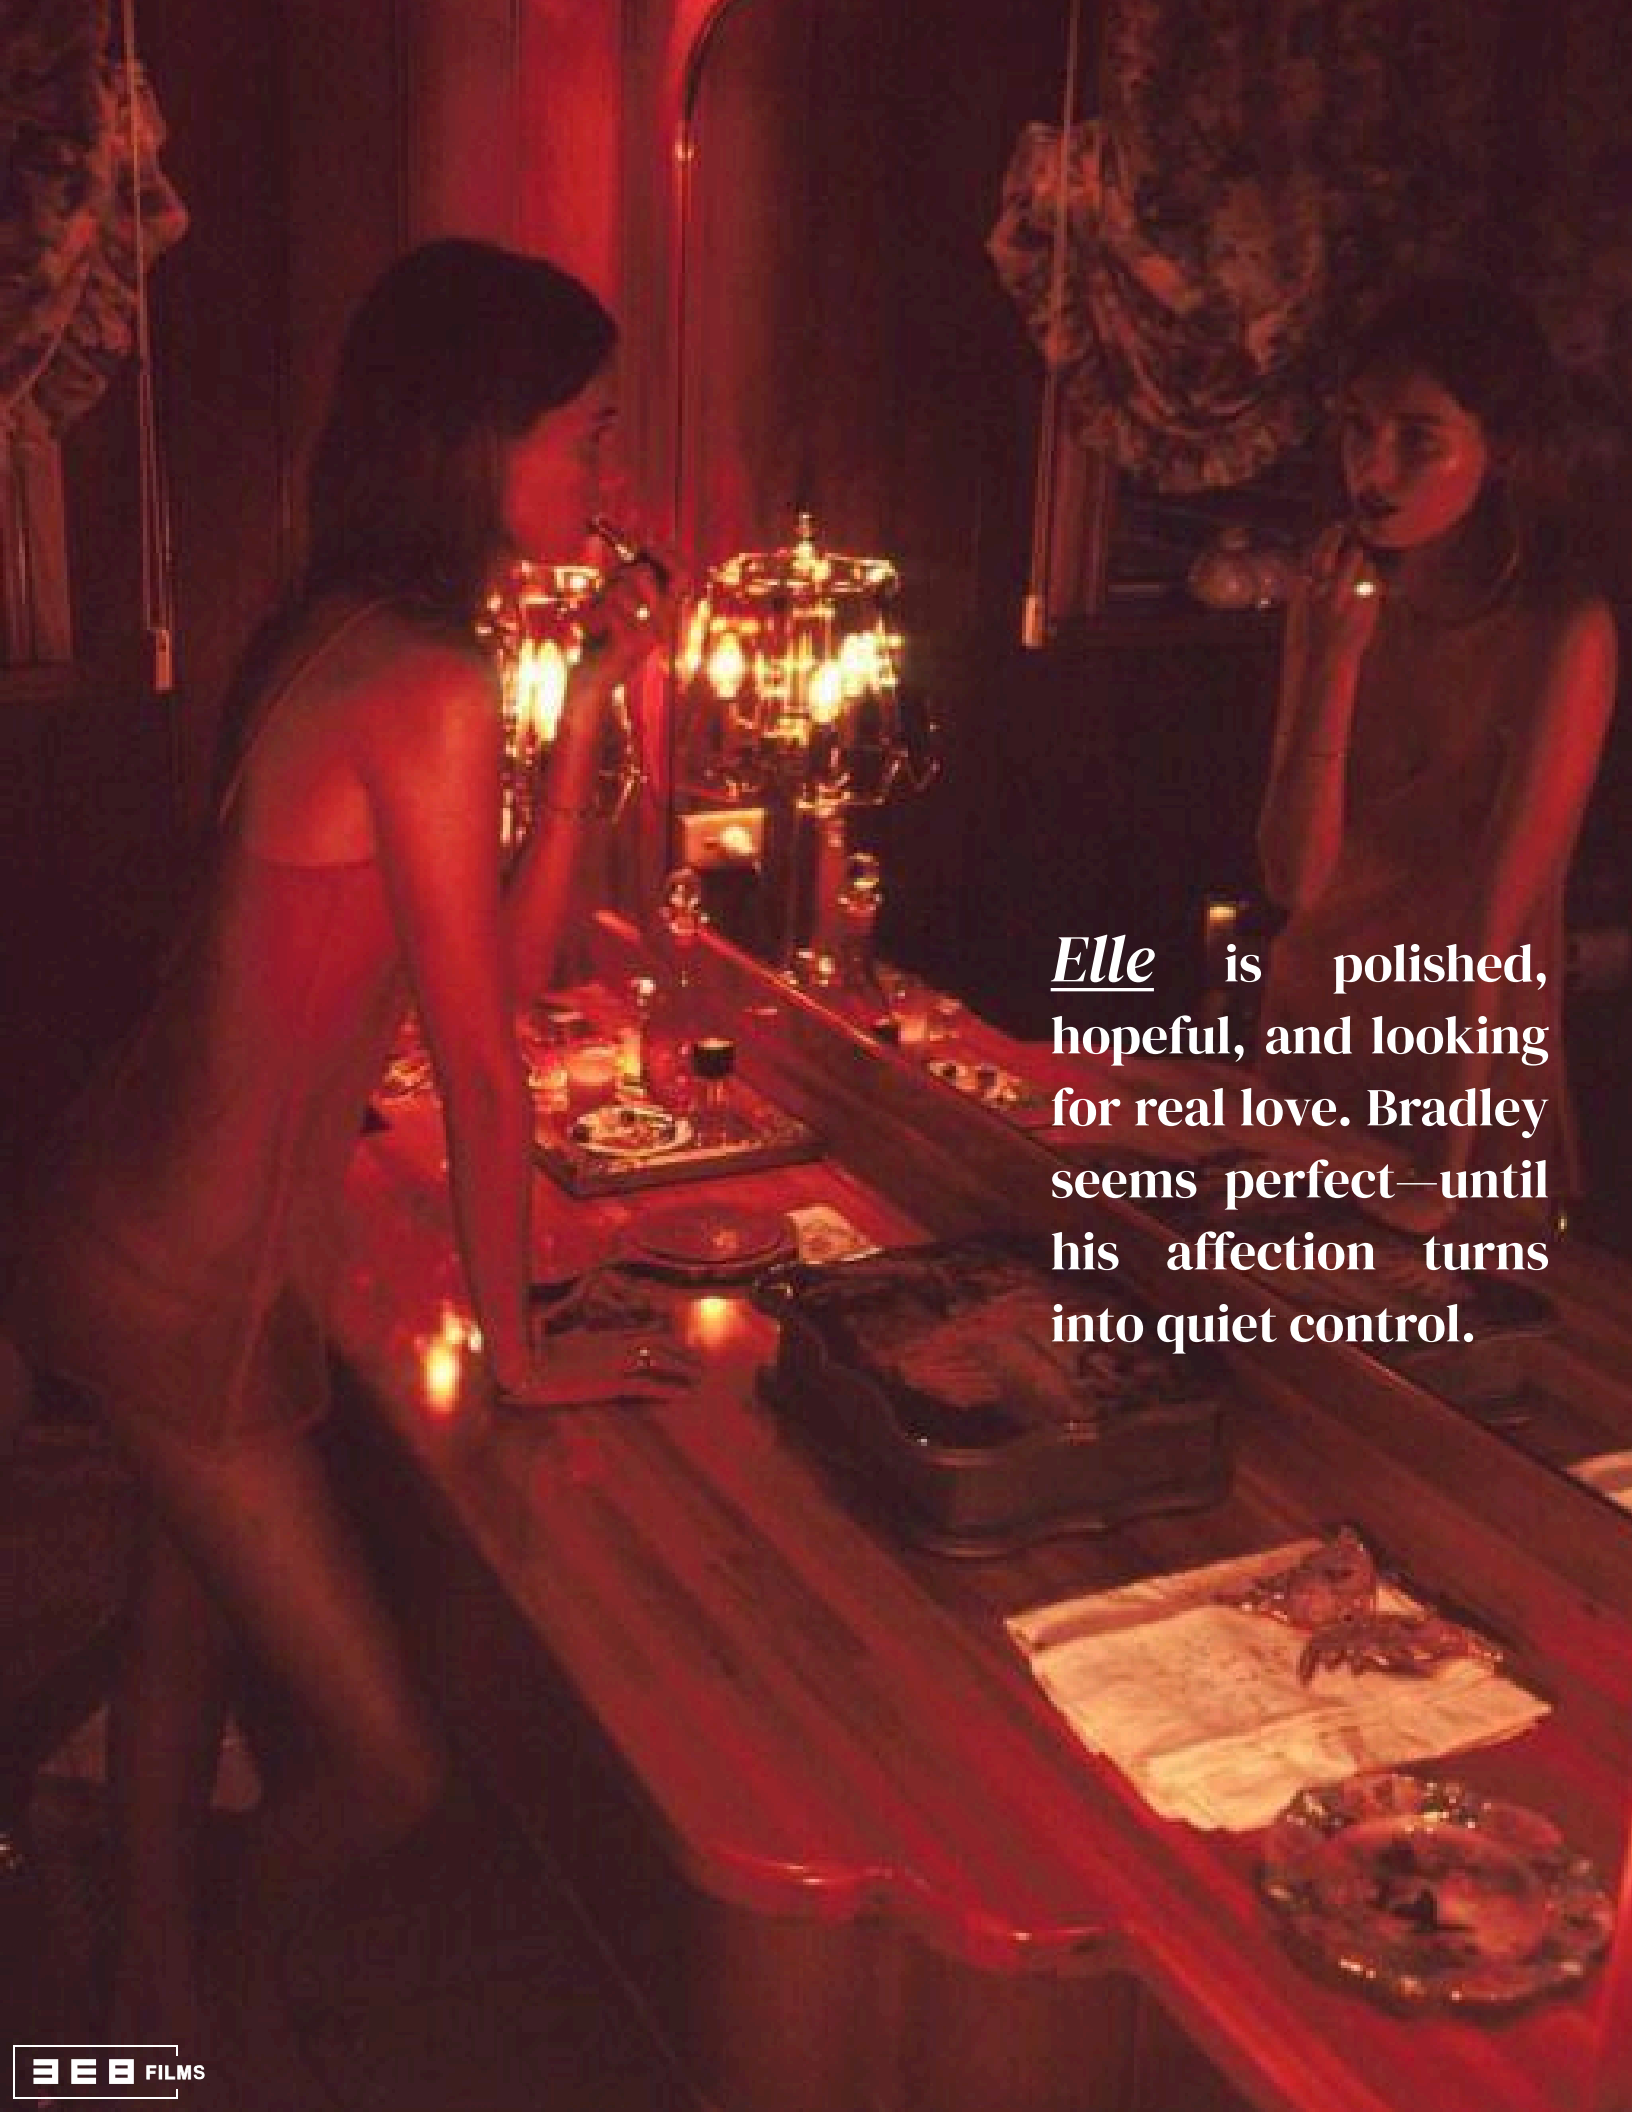

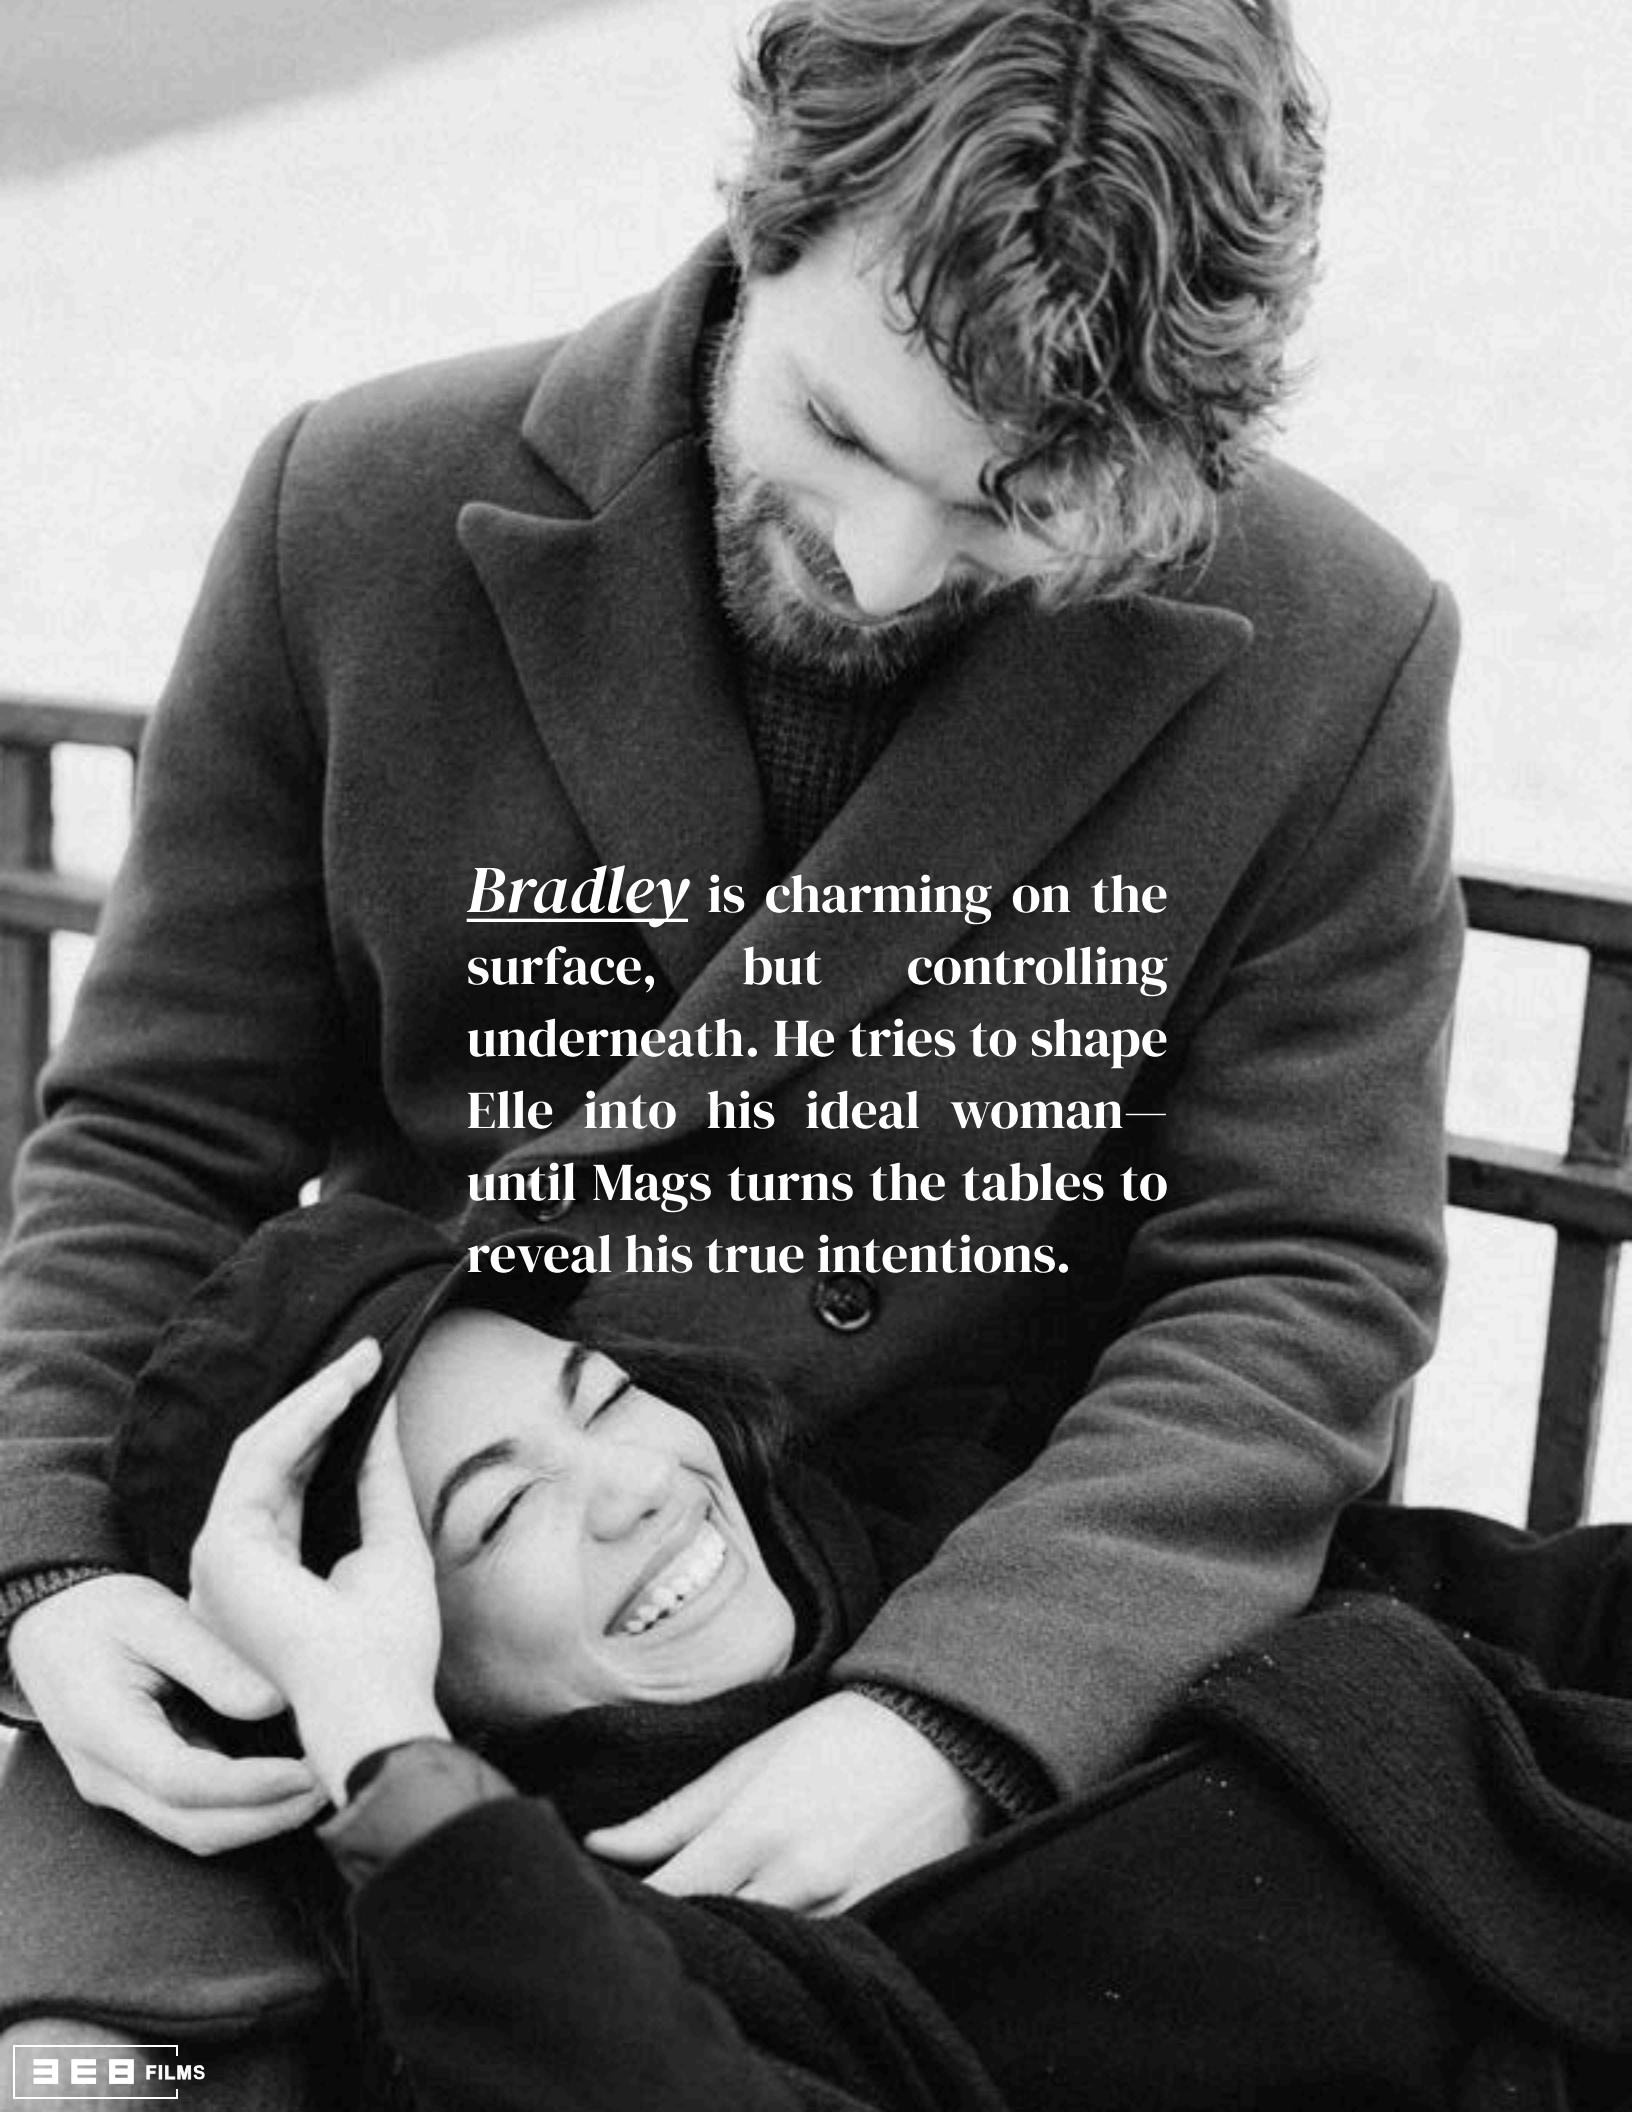

THE STORY

Mags is sharp,
cynical, and protective.
When Bradley starts
dating her best friend Elle, she seduces him to see the truth—and
when he fails the test,
she doesn't hesitate.

A woman with dark hair, wearing a red dress, is seen from the side, leaning over a bar. She is holding a glass to her lips. The bar is illuminated by warm, golden light from ornate lamps. A large mirror on the wall reflects her and the bar's interior. The scene is set in a classic, elegant bar or lounge.

Elle is polished,
hopeful, and looking for real love. Bradley seems perfect—until his affection turns into quiet control.

Bradley is charming on the surface, but controlling underneath. He tries to shape Elle into his ideal woman—until Mags turns the tables to reveal his true intentions.

Reporting from...

Savannah Steele is Los Angeles' most trusted newscaster—calm, composed, and always camera-ready. She reports on the Sunset Killer, an unidentified figure targeting victims along the West-side's glossy coastline.

What's Your Number?

BODY COUNT has two meanings:
If you're young — it's number of fucks.
If you're old — it's number of kills.
